CURRICULUM 1975-1976

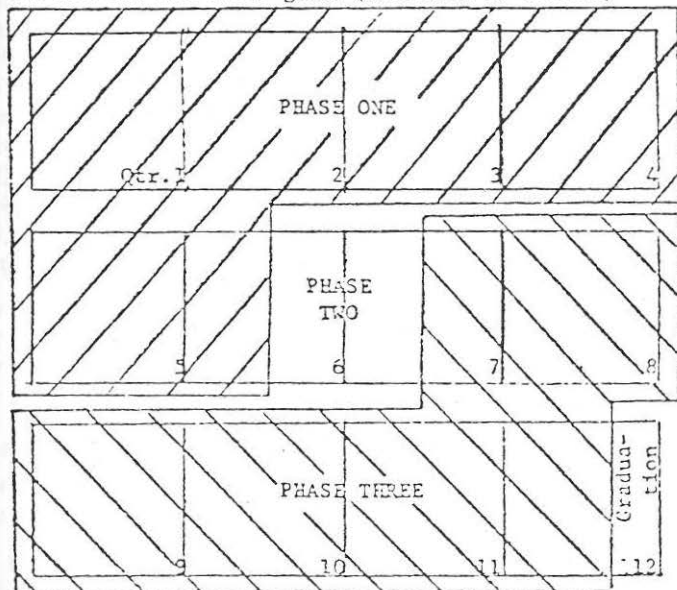

In July 1972 a new twelve-quarter medical education program was implemented by the University of Nebraska College of Medicine. Significant curriculum changes have been initiated to provide both an improved medical education and more physicians for the State of Nebraska. This endeavor was undertaken to meet the changing health needs of the area and the nation.

This new curriculum allows a student to complete the requirements for the M.D. degree in three calendar years of four quarters each. The admissions requirements for the new curriculum will remain unchanged from the traditional four-year program. Students can complete their medical education in three years. Alternative four-year programs are available and can be arranged through the Assistant Deans for Student Affairs. A general narrative of the curriculum is as follows:

Phase One of the twelve-quarter curriculum emphasizes the basic sciences. The specific areas included are Anatomy, Biochemistry, Microbiology, Pathology, Pharmacology, Physiology, and Clinical Medicine. Behavioral science and basic clinical science techniques are introduced in a hospital setting, an ambulatory setting, and in psychiatry. (Duration: 14½ months)

Phase Two of the curriculum is referred to as the "transition." It occurs after National Boards, Part I (taken 15 months after entrance), and enables the student to synthesize material learned in Phase One with his/her beginning skills in clinical science. Much of the time in this segment is devoted to small group exercises. (Duration: 1½ months)

Phase Three of the curriculum provides clinical experience for students, including primary clerkships and electives (with an optional month of vacation time). The primary clerkships are eight weeks long and include Internal Medicine, Obstetrics-Gynecology, Psychiatry, Pediatrics, and Surgery. Four weeks are required in each of the areas of Outpatient Medicine, Neuroscience, and Community Preceptorship (a month with a health team in outstate Nebraska). Students spend the remainder of their time in preclinical and clinical electives offered by all departments and divisions of the College of Medicine. The student is able to select a program with faculty counsel that most effectively supports his interests and career goals. (Duration: 19 months)
